

FINANCIAL AID FOR STEFANSSON

National Geographical Society

Votes Sum of $22,500
for Proposed Trip.

TO SEEK POLAR CONTINENT

American Museum of Natural History to Give Him Similar Amount.

Washington, January 12.—It became known to-day that the National Geographical Society intends to finance Vilhelm Stefansson, the discoverer of the "blonde Eskimos," on his proposed trip next year into the Arctic in search of the polar continent which scientists believe exists there.

The society has voted the sum of $22,500 for Stefansson's use for this purpose, $5,000 of which is to become available the first (next) year, $5,000 in 1915, $5,000 in 1916, and the balance, $7,500, the year after.

In addition, Stefansson will, of course, be granted the scientific endorsement of the society and if he should discover the continent he will have done so under auspices of the society.

To Get A Similar Sum.
It is learned that Stefansson also will be receiving a similar sum of $22,500 from the American Museum of Natural History, New York, payable in installments for use on this trip in search of the polar continent. Stefansson was the protégé of the American Museum of Natural History on his previous trip to the far north, during which he discovered the "blonde Eskimos" in King Edward Land, which he told of in Washington last fall before the National Geographical Society.

The New York organization did not vote him a sum for his trip of next year until recently and not until after it had learned of the intention of the National Geographical Society to finance him. As soon as the Washington body acted, the New York organization, fearing it would lose Stefansson from its list of explorers, decided to vote him a sum similar to that voted by the Washington society, and raised the cash for the purpose among its members at once.

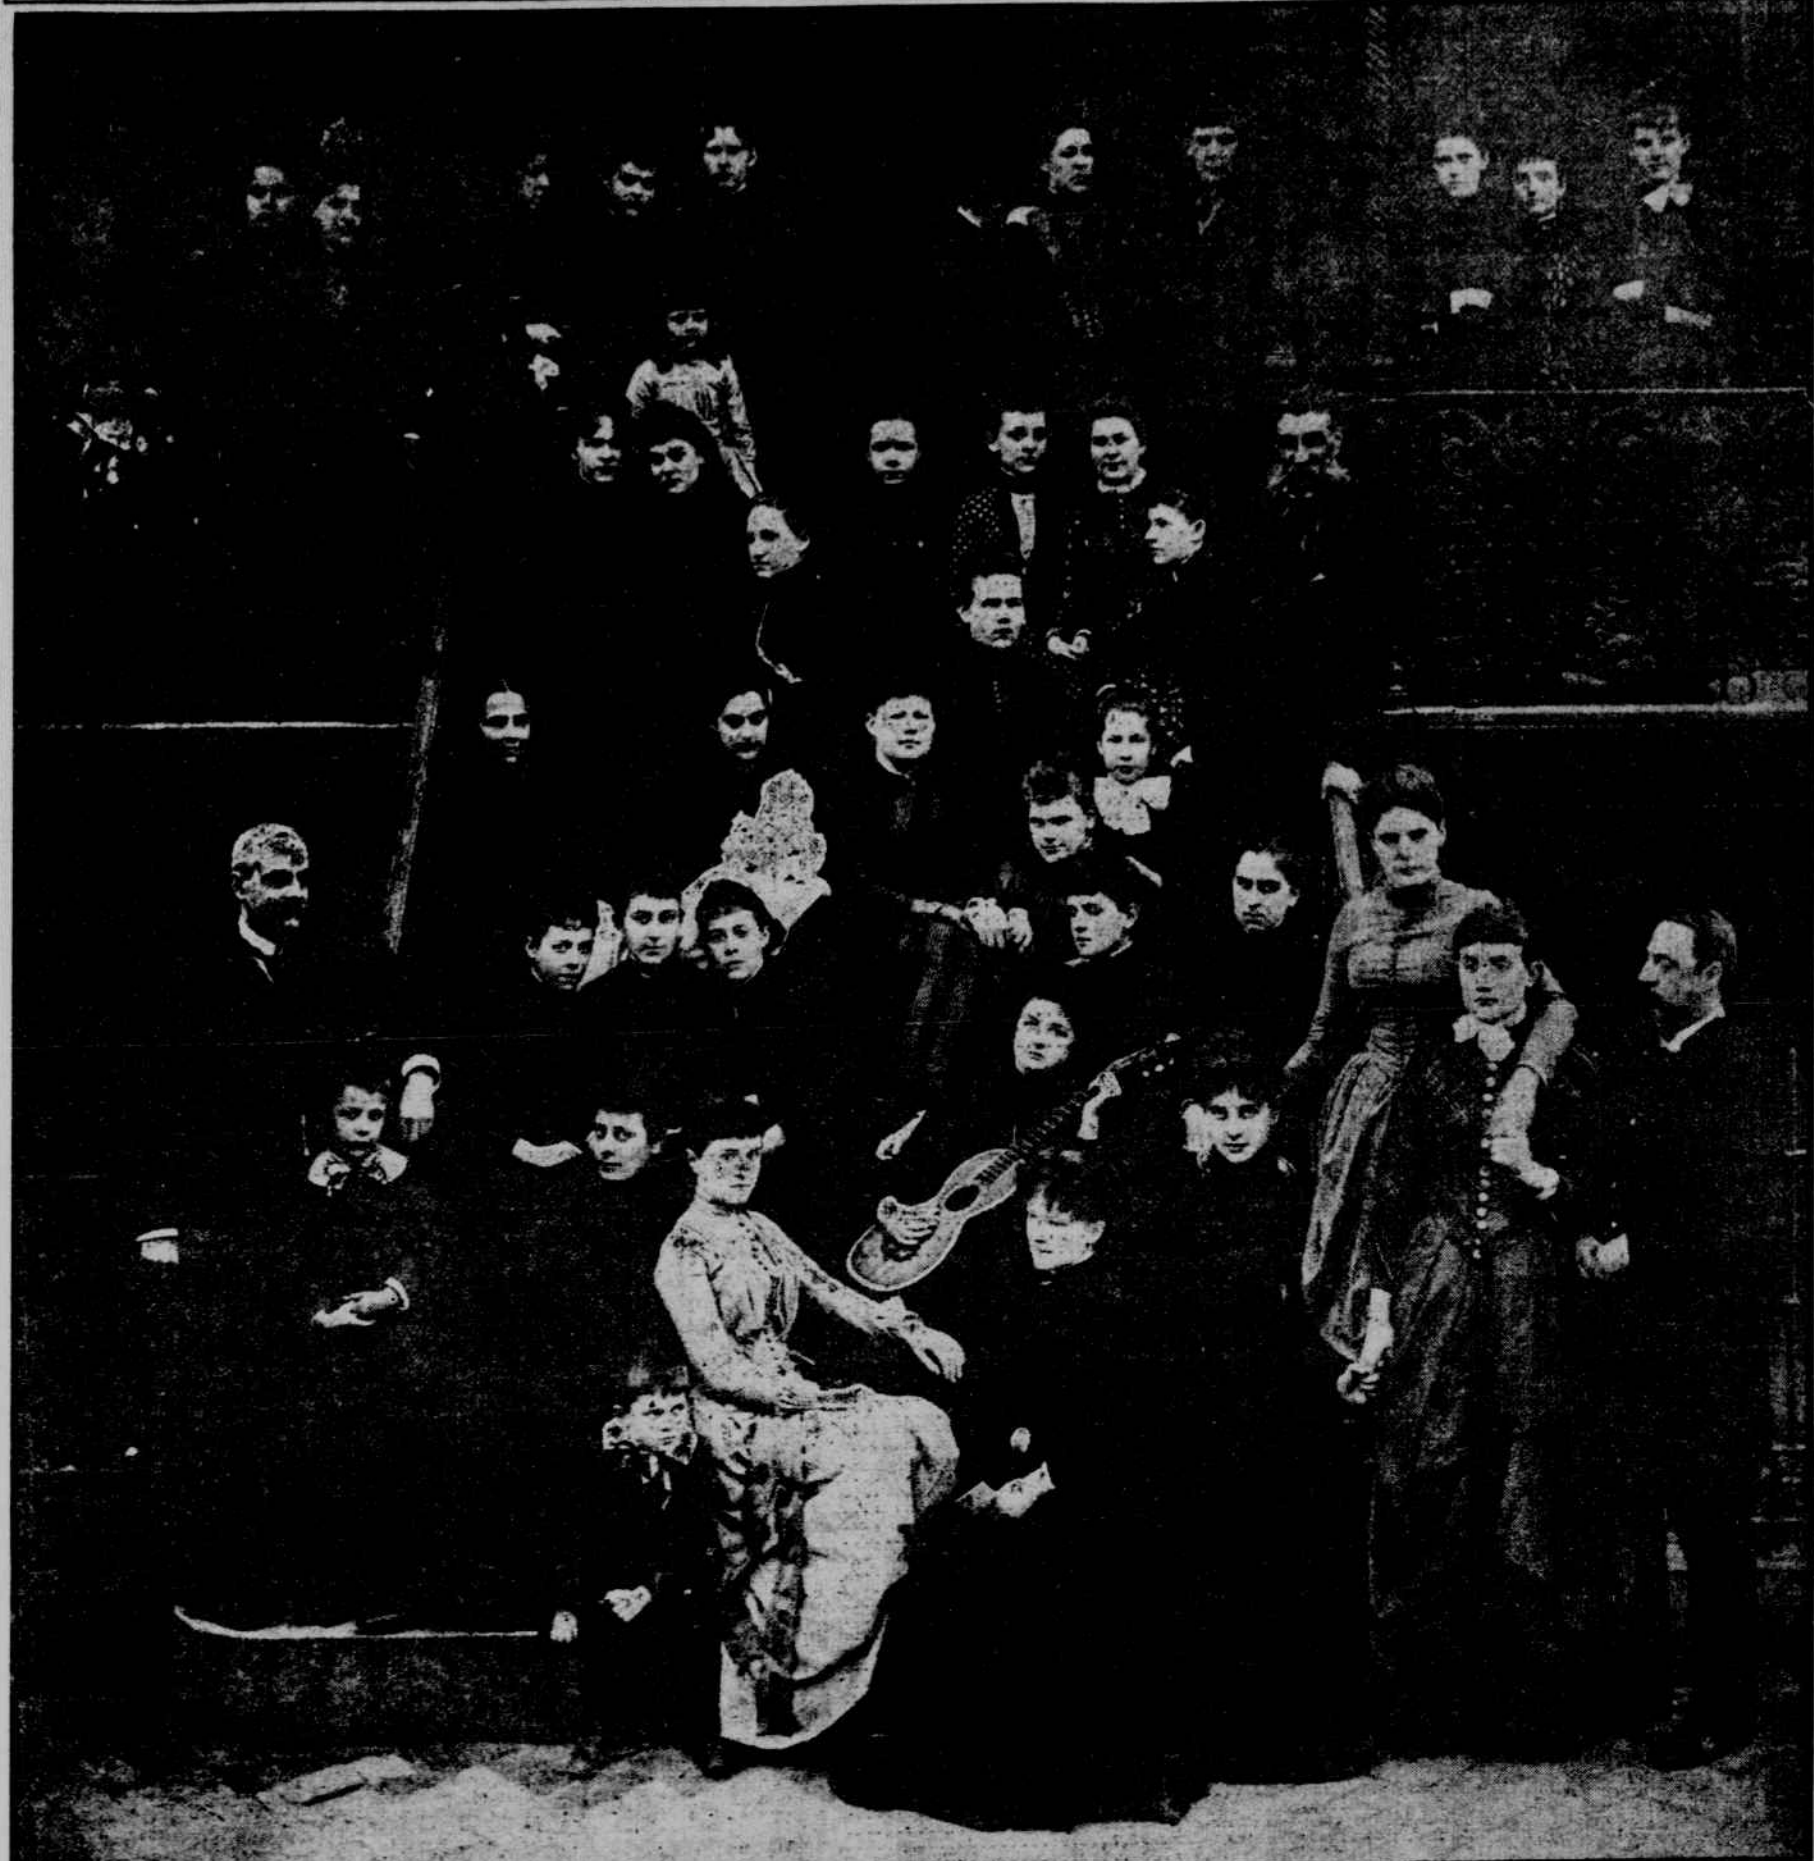

It is believed by some members of the National Geographical Society that Roald Amundsen, the discoverer of the South Pole, who left Washington for New York yesterday, may discover the polar continent of the north, although the trial he will begin to the Arctic in July of next year will not be made with that end primarily in view.

Scientists have declared for some time that the fluctuations of the tides in the north polar seas can be accounted for only by the explanation that there is land there. Amundsen is going to that region in the Fram, said to be the staunchest Arctic ship ever built, with the expectation of being frozen in the ice in 1915 and "drifting" through the polar sea from west to east, with the idea of coming out at the Atlantic side five years after he starts from Bering Sea.

The discoverer of the South Pole goes to the northern seas primarily for the purpose of making meteorological and magnetic records and observations. Who is to finance his trip has not yet been settled, although it is said that he will have little difficulty in obtaining as much in the way of funds as he needs in his native Norway, where exploration has always been more or less of a religion among the people, who have been heavily drawn upon in the past for Norway's many expeditions. It is not expected that his expense will be very great, as the Fram carries a crew of but ten men, and the use of the vessel has been voted him by the Norwegian government, which owns it.

Amundsen will return to Washington in May to consult with the National

One result of the Amundsen's trip to Washington, just finished, during which he was presented with the National Geographical Society's gold medal for his work in the Antarctic, was the very happy understanding that arose between him and Peary, largely due to Amundsen's expressed admiration for the older explorer. The South Pole discoverer expressed himself more than freely on this subject while here, and members of the National Geographical Society, particularly to Gilbert Grosvenor, its director. Peary, Mr. Grosvenor said to-day, "until the south polar discoverer came to Washington. The latter told us that he had always admired Peary's scientific method of approaching objects aimed at. He was evidently most sincere in his expressions of admiration. Amundsen said, for instance, 'Mr. Grosvenor continued, that in Europe there was an idea that Peary was rugged and austere, which Amundsen had acquired. When they met here in Washington that was changed, and Amundsen, continuing, said that Peary was a man of the most charming manner. In a word, Amundsen fell in love with Peary, so to speak.'"

"Signed: 'Amelia, N. Y.
'Gentlemen: Prior to Feb. 1908, I was located in Rochester, N. Y., suffering with La Grippe, which developed into Tuberculosis. My physician gave me one month to live. I was having terrible night sweats and mid-day chills and losing flesh rapidly. I coughed and raised continually and became so weak that walking a few feet exhausted me. On my return home, I changed my physician. He gave me regular physical treatment. My father, who is a clergyman, heard of Eckman's Alternative and induced me to take it. The night sweats and chills disappeared. My cough became easier and gradually diminished and in a few days I developed a perfect health, back to 130 lbs. I feel certain that I owe my life to Eckman's Alternative."

Vonderlehr, Mills and Gunst the resolution looking to an inquiry into the character of telephone service rendered in Richmond. The work of the sub-committee is merely preliminary, the committee being authorized to confer with the officials of the telephone company and see if the matters complained of cannot be remedied without the necessity of a long-winded and formal investigation. The resolution referred to the Street Committee for report will, if adopted by the Council, empower a general investigation of the character of plant, service and rates of the telephone company, to determine whether it is in all respects living up to the terms of its franchise. It will be the work of the sub-committee to determine whether the nature of the complaints are of sufficiently serious character to justify such an inquiry.

The Committee recommended to the Council that Samuel P. Waddill and Dolie C. Adams, non-residents, be allowed to connect with a city sewer. The petition of W. B. West for improvements on Nineteenth Street was, after discussion, withdrawn. Mr. West stated that he would bring it before the Administrative Board.

It appearing from the debate that there was some confusion in the minds of members of the committee as to the exact powers of the committee or rather where its duties stopped, and those of the Administrative Board began, a resolution was adopted requesting City Attorney Pollard or Assistant City Attorney Anderson to sit with the committee at its stated meetings until matters are straightened out.
